Re. 1-8

PRINTED BY
NANDA LAL CHATTERJEE, INDIAN PRESS,
6, COLLEGE STREET BYE-LANE, CALCUTTA.

P R E F A C E.

The present compilation requires an apology for its introduction into being ; and a very simple one it will be.

During the many years that I have been doing literary business and working as a teacher, I have often had occasion to consult for my own use and recommend for the use of my students Dictionaries of the class in which the present book aims to be classed. Some of the works which I thus used or recommended satisfied me in many points. But I hardly came across one which combined in it the double function of both a Bengali and a Bengali-English Dictionary. Where a book could satisfy this condition it was found wanting either in cheapness or in that comprehensiveness coupled with that accuracy by which alone it could meet the requirement of students in the higher classes of our schools, and which alone could secure for it the approbation of that most capable class of judges of such works, viz. the teachers in our schools.

The energetic proprietor of the City Book Society, Calcutta, Babu Jogindra Nath Sarkar, happening to have an idea of publishing a Dictionary exactly similar in scope, requested me sometime back to take the work up, which I very gladly did. How far I have succeeded in giving shape to my own ideas and his, is for the learned public and especially for our teachers, who, as I have already said, are the best judges of such works, to decide. I have ample faith in the discriminating power of the judges I have named and shall gladly abide by their decision on the merit of my work. It will not, however, be considered out of place here to recapitulate some points worthy of note in this book.

First and foremost, my object has been to compile from the very best and reliable authorities a handy, cheap and useful Bengali-to-Bengali-and-English Dictionary of which many, in common with me, have long felt the want. Thus my book serves the twofold purpose of both a purely Bengali and a Bengali-English Dictionary. I have made constant endeavour to keep out all those Sanskritic words which are hardly, if ever, used in ordinary writing or found in ordinary text-books, but which one may always be sure of finding in a lexicon of pretensions. By this means I have been able to keep the book considerably within bounds (for the entire book consists of about 600 pages only), while, at the same time, I believe, the charge of sacrificing matter to cheapness cannot be truthfully laid at my door.

Another important feature which I believe will not fail to please all discriminating critics is that I have endeavoured to make this work a great help to students and people in business as well.

As regards the student section of the public whom it is the scope of this book to help, knowing, as I do from experience, what important part a habit of correct translation from the beginning plays in the acquisition of a foreign tongue, I have so far improved upon the recognized way of compiling Dictionaries as to include all matters, which, strictly speaking, fall beyond the range of a simple Dictionary such as the present one is, but which every student who is old enough to know the use of a Dictionary ought to be thoroughly acquainted with. A sufficiently large stock of English synonyms of the more important words has been given to enable the student to choose from to suit the exact shade of meaning he wants to convey. Advantage has also been freely taken of words to introduce phrases and expressions in which they occur to give the student an idea of the best way of conveying the same thought in English. Where, again, it has been found that a sentence literally or even idiomatically translated would not be perfectly English, a separate Appendix (Appendix B) has been made use of. Appendix B will thus be found to consist of such and only such proverbs in Sanskrit and Bengali as require not mere translation but thoroughly English proverbs to express the ideas conveyed by them. In this direction, I have been partly anticipated, so far as I can see, by one compiler only.

Appendix C is an entirely new idea so far as a work of the present kind goes. It is earnestly hoped that this feature will commend itself greatly to the not inconsiderable section of the reading public who engage in business but imperfectly equipped with a knowledge of the language and with far less command over the technicalities of such a varied subject as Law. It only needs mention here for the information of such persons that the present Appendix is but the nucleus around which has grown a fuller and more complete Dictionary of Law Terms which is in the Press now and in the hands of the same publishers.

I do not by any manner of means claim for this modest compilation immunity from mistake, either of

Doppler of printing, which would be apparently very idle to do. All that I have to say in this connection is that if I have erred in any material point, I shall invariably be found to have erred in very good company, and that I shall nonetheless feel deeply grateful to any gentleman who may come across any mistakes, errors, misprints &c. in this work and kindly draw my attention to them, so that they may be corrected and acknowledged in a subsequent edition when one is called for.

The abbreviations used in this book are of the commonest kind and such as are met with in every Dictionary, and would therefore hardly require any special mention.
